How we see badges

A badge in business is more than just a name tag it is a representation of our business culture. When an employee wears our uniform, they become a representation of business x.

So, when we do not take time to reward employees, train them or provide essential growth in our company we deprive our workers of a proper working environment.

Employees are as equal importance as customers. The top individual makes the strategies, but it is the people on the bottom who perform them.

The way we treat our employees can boost or hinder our success.

The manager sets the tone that echoes the tradition of the company, to wear this badge an employee must feel agreeable that the firm has his or her best work interest at heart. This simple concept could be: providing realistic training, opening suggestions, giving positive feedbacks and allowing opportunities for a promotion.

Training our employees to be more self-managed is good, but creating a proper working environment is the best.
